USPA NEWS - There are three critical areas of differences between B2C and B2B startups: :

A B2B transaction is, by definition, an Investment; an Investment in Future Profitability, Cost Reduction, Timesaving, Productivity, Sales or Customer Satisfaction.

There are three critical areas of differences between B2C and B2B startups: :

- * Return on Investment (ROI);
- * Client Relationship;
- * Decision-Making Process.

A B2B transaction is, by definition, an Investment; an Investment in Future Profitability, Cost Reduction, Timesaving, Productivity, Sales or Customer Satisfaction. Unlike Consumers, Businesses never buy Technology simply to look good, for fun or for the user experience. Expectations of ROI are always built into the Purchase of New Technology.

B2B Markets are generally much smaller than B2Cs. Burning leads in B2C may not be a big deal if the Market has millions of Potential Customers, but, with substantially Smaller Markets in B2B, burning Leads quickly become a big deal. To succeed in B2B, Entrepreneurs need to build deep Relationships with a relatively small number of Companies. Relationship-Building Skills are critical to landing Long-Term Agreements and growing existing Relationships. This is one of the Reasons why B2B Companies are often Service-Focused and operate with a different Business Model.
